It reflects on the story of the Israelites in bondage in Egypt, where their unspoken cries reached God's ears, leading to their eventual liberation.

Transcript

And the cry of their heart rose up. It wasn't even in words, but it was a heart that was crying out and groaning. And it says this, it came to pass in the process of time that the king of Egypt died, and the children of Israel sighed out by reason of the bondage.

And they cried, and their cry came up to God. And the Lord heard their groanings. That's the groanings that Stephen describes it, that's used there in Romans 8 about groanings, which can't be uttered.
