

The Way to Restoration

by Andrew Murray

Andrew Murray emphasizes the need for repentance among saved individuals who are living in a mediocre Christian experience.

Scripture: Luke 15:11

Topics: "Repentance", "Spiritual Restoration"

Description

Andrew Murray emphasizes the path to restoration for Christians who feel stuck in a mediocre spiritual life. He draws parallels between the prodigal son and the elder brother, urging believers to repent for their hard thoughts about God and to seek a deeper experience of His promises. Murray encourages those who have tasted God's grace to recognize their longing for more and to believe in God's ability to cleanse their past sins. He calls for a genuine repentance that leads to a renewed faith and a richer relationship with God.

Transcript

We need to consider the way to restoration, the way to get out of this mediocre Christian experience. The prodigal repented, and the elder brother should have done so as well. Like him, those children of God who have been living within the sight of God's promises without enjoying them need to repent. I am not talking about the repentance of the unsaved but of those who already know what it is to be pardoned. Haven't you sinned by having hard thoughts about God, and isn't there in your heart a longing, a thirsting and hungering, for something better than what you have now? Come then, repent, and just believe that God does indeed blot out the sin of your converted life. Do you believe that?
