

(Clip) The Love of the Truth

by Art Katz

This sermon emphasizes the necessity of vigilance for the truth, especially in the last days where it is crucial moment by moment. It highlights the high cost of maintaining this vigilance but stresses that losing this sense results in emptiness and ineffectiveness in impacting society. The speaker laments the tragic outcome of a church that becomes self-absorbed, merely going through the motions without truly conveying the seriousness of their faith to the next generation or the world.

Transcript

The love of the truth requires a vigilance for the truth. And that is daily. And in the last days, I would say hourly and moment by moment.

That's expensive, but there's no cheap way. Because if we lose that sense, we've lost everything. We're hollow, we're gongs and And we have no effect on the society about us.

What a melancholy, pathetic end for the church that has turned in on itself, and whose last existence is mere succession of services, who have not even impressed our own children with the seriousness of what we are about, let alone the world.
