

Personal Responsibility

by Arthur Vess

Taking personal responsibility in giving is essential, and we should not make excuses for not tithing.

Scripture: Deuteronomy 14:22, Proverbs 3:9, Malachi 3:10, Luke 16:10, 2 Corinthians 9:7

Topics: "Stewardship", "Tithing Responsibility"

Description

Arthur Vess addresses the excuse of not tithing due to not handling money at home, emphasizing the importance of individual responsibility in tithing regardless of who manages the finances. He highlights the equal rights of spouses in tithing, especially when one partner stays at home while the other works. Vess stresses that excuses are not valid until one has truly given their best effort. Additionally, he mentions the parental role in teaching children to tithe and the responsibility to tithe on behalf of children if they receive income.

Transcript

8. Excuse Eight: "I would tithe, but I do not handle the money at our house." This may be true in some cases, but would you tithe it if you had a chance? Do you tithe the amounts that you do get? The wife has equal rights with the husband in the tithe if she keeps the home while he keeps the shop or works away. We are excused after we have done our best, but not before. In case of children the parents should teach, and if necessary, require them to tithe until of age. If the parents received the pay of the child, they should tithe it.
