Description

A.W. Tozer emphasizes the significance of trust in our friendship with God, asserting that revealed truths only become effective when accepted with active faith. He explains that our attitude towards these truths shapes their impact on our lives, urging believers to let God's truth permeate their thoughts and prayers. As our friendship with God deepens, our lives become simpler, free from the formalities required in casual relationships. True friendship is characterized by mutual trust, allowing for a more profound connection with the divine.

Transcript

It should be pointed out that no revealed truth becomes automatically effective. The effect any truth has upon us depends upon our attitude toward it. First it must be accepted in active faith and received into our minds as completely trustworthy and beyond dispute. It must become a kind of dye to give color to all of our thinking and praying. The more perfect our friendship with God becomes the simpler will our lives be. Those formalities that are so necessary to keep a casual friendship alive may be dispensed with when true friends sit in each other's presence. True friends trust each other.
