Description

A.W. Tozer emphasizes that the Bible is a life-giving book, designed to guide humanity towards understanding God's mercy, the importance of faith, and the need for trust in our Heavenly Father. He explains that the scriptures serve to remind us of our frailty, warn us of the dangers of sin, and prepare us for eternal life in heaven. The Bible's teachings are not merely for intellectual curiosity but are meant to lead us away from destruction and towards divine grace. Through its stories and lessons, we are encouraged to reflect on our faults and seek deliverance. Ultimately, the Bible is a beacon of hope and guidance for our spiritual journey.

Transcript

The Bible is a life-bringing and a life-giving book. It is not primarily concerned with any department of human thought for its own sake. If the Bible speaks about the rainbow, it is that we may be reminded of God's covenant of mercy with mankind. If it tells the story of Abraham, it does so that we may learn to know the place of faith in our relation to God. If it points us to the moon and the stars, it is that we may know how frail we are. If it talks about the birds, it is to teach us to trust our Heavenly Father without fear or doubting. It tells us about hell not to satisfy our morbid curiosity, but that we may steer our feet far from its terrors.

It tells us about heaven that we may be prepared to enter there.

It writes the history of human disgrace that we may learn the value of divine grace. It warns in order that it may turn our feet away from the paths that go down to the path of destruction. It rebukes in order that we may see our own faults and be delivered from them.
