Description

A.W. Tozer emphasizes the significance of the promised Presence of God and the eternal Word of God, which transcends mere physical texts. He contrasts the fleeting interests of humanity, such as sports, with the lasting impact of God's Word, which embodies His mind and truth. Tozer calls for a profound awareness of God's presence and the transformative power of His Word, suggesting that true reality lies in recognizing and responding to these divine truths. He challenges listeners to prioritize the eternal over the temporary, urging them to listen to the breath of God that speaks life and truth.

Transcript

Two of the great realities in our midst are surely the promised Presence of God and the testimony of His eternal Word! By the "Word of God" I do not refer only to the book you hold in your hand—paper and letters, pages and ink—sewed together with silk thread. By the Word of God I do mean the expression of the mind of God: the mighty, world-filling breath of God! Most of the things men and women talk about cannot be counted among the great realities of life. In October, people talk a great deal about the World Series as a great reality, but by December they have forgotten who pitched and who struck out.

People spend their entire lives in the pursuit of those things that can only perish and fade away.

But when it is all over, they are still going to be faced with the reality of the eternal Word of God, the revelation of Truth which God has given us! Think of the changes that would come if humans would suddenly stop and hear the Word of God!
