

One Soul Was Worth Any Cost

by Carter Conlon

This sermon emphasizes the courage and dedication of the early believers who were willing to face death in order to profess their faith in Christ. It challenges modern-day believers to consider the potential costs of openly following Jesus, including societal backlash, job loss, and cancellation, while highlighting the unwavering commitment of the early Christians despite the risks they faced.

Scripture: Matthew 16:24, Acts 5:29, Luke 9:23, 2 Timothy 3:12, Matthew 10:28

Topics: "Courage in Faith", "Cost of Discipleship"

Description

This sermon emphasizes the courage and dedication of the early believers who were willing to face death in order to profess their faith in Christ. It challenges modern-day believers to consider the potential costs of openly following Jesus, including societal backlash, job loss, and cancellation, while highlighting the unwavering commitment of the early Christians despite the risks they faced.

Transcript

They believed that even one soul was worth any cost that might come their way. Let's not fool ourselves for a second. Everyone in that upper room knew that to fully come out this door and profess Christ could be a death sentence to them.

We today could lose our jobs. We today might be snickered at by a sneering society. We today might be cancelled.

We today might find ourselves on the losing end of some social system that wants to shut down the voice of God. But they knew that when they stepped out of that upper room, they could be put to death for following a Savior that the society of their time was in no mood to have resurrected in their midst.
