by C.H. Spurgeon

Topics: "Prioritizing God", "Transience of Comforts"

Description

C.H. Spurgeon emphasizes the transient nature of earthly comforts and urges believers to prioritize their relationship with God over material possessions. He warns against placing too much value on worldly comforts, reminding us that they are temporary and should not be the foundation of our lives. Instead, Spurgeon encourages us to seek God in all circumstances, whether in abundance or loss, and to recognize that true sustenance comes from God's word. He calls for gratitude towards God for our comforts while maintaining a perspective that values Him above all else.

Transcript

To sum up the whole, my dear brothers and sisters in Christ, look not at the things which are seen. Do not look upon your comforts as if they were enduring. Do not dote upon them. Do not think of them as if you had them otherwise than on loan, or as if you had any right to them. Be thankful to God for them; but, because they will so soon pass away, do not set much store by them. Build not your nest on any of these trees, for they are all marked for the axe, and ere long they will all come down. Say not of any mortal man, or woman, or dear child, or worldly possession, or knowledge, or pursuit, or honor, "This is much to me." Let it be little to you. Put the gifts of God far down in the scale compared with himself.

Try, when you have your comforts, to find God in all; and, when you lose your comforts, then just change the words, and try to find all in God; for, remember, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God shall man live."

From a sermon by Charles Haddon Spurgeon entitled "Vanities And Verities."
