Description

David Wilkerson emphasizes the critical question of whether we believe God will see us through our challenges and meet our needs. He draws parallels to the faith of the blind men who were healed by Jesus, highlighting that God desires our trust above all else. Wilkerson warns against impulsive decisions made without divine guidance, stressing that God is not interested in our possessions but in our faith and obedience. He encourages believers to stand firm in their confidence in God, assuring them that true rest and peace come from trusting Him. Ultimately, pleasing God requires unwavering faith and a commitment to seek Him diligently.

Transcript

The most important question facing God's people in these last days is this: "Do you believe God will see you through? Do you believe he can do all that is necessary to answer your prayers and meet your needs?" This is the same question our Lord asked the two blind men who begged him for mercy and healing. "Do you believe that I am able to do this?" They said, 'Yes, Lord.' ... And their eyes were opened" (Matthew 9:28-30).

The Lord asks you, me, the church, "Do you believe I am able to direct and guide you and perform my perfect will in your life? Do you believe I am still at work on your behalf? Or do you harbor secret thoughts that I have forsaken you and let you down?" God is not primarily interested in our doing some great work for him; rather, he desperately wants us to simply trust him.

Some restless Christians want to "forsake all and get into some kind of full-time ministry." In fact, some are actually selling their homes and businesses and packing the family off to some poverty-type ministry without a true directive from the Holy Spirit. Occasionally God is in such plans, but in most instances, he is not.

Beloved, God does not want anything you possess; he is not after your house, your land, your car, or any other worldly possession. No! He wants your trust and he longs for you to be firmly established in your confidence in him. He desires your obedience, and the Word of God is clear that he will be pleased with nothing short of your faith.

"But without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he who comes to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of those who diligently seek Him" (Hebrews 11:6). Stand still and trust in the Lord, fixed and established in your confidence in him. In so doing, you will enjoy rest, peace of mind and freedom from fear. What joy to have the assurance that you are pleasing him with your trust.
