Description

David Wilkerson emphasizes the importance of recognizing the sufficiency provided by God for believers, highlighting that many experience despair due to a lack of faith in God's provisions. He shares a personal experience with Kathryn Kuhlman, who reminded him that true ministry under the Holy Spirit should leave one feeling empowered rather than exhausted. Wilkerson encourages believers to draw from the 'bank of heaven' and to understand that God's grace increases in times of weakness, allowing them to abound in every good work. He stresses that faith is key to accessing this divine strength and sufficiency.

Transcript

Why do so many believers experience weakness, feelings of despair and emptiness, as if they can't go on? It is because they do not have the revelation that the Spirit gave Paul--a revelation of all the provisions God has made possible for those who would claim them by faith!

Do you fit Paul's description of a bountiful servant--one who has all he needs and more, at all times, in every crisis? Have you proven this by drawing on the bank of heaven?

For several years I worked with Kathryn Kuhlman. I preached my heart out at her meetings in the morning and evening, and usually by the end of the day I was wiped out. One night Kathryn said to Gwen and me, "Let's go out and get something to eat." I told her, "I'm sorry--I'm too tired. I've got to go to the motel and get some sleep."

She looked at me quizzically and asked, "David, did you preach under the Spirit's unction tonight?" I answered, "You know I was anointed. The altars were filled!"

Kathryn said quietly, "Then you're missing something. If you're ministering under the power of the Holy Ghost, you should be stronger at the end of service than when you started--because he is a quickening Spirit! You can rise above your flesh, because by the Spirit you can claim that freedom." Since then I have proved that truth in my ministry.

"...that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work" (2 Corinthians 9:8). To abound here literally means, "ever-increasing; to have more at the end than at the beginning." In other words, as the battle gets hotter, God's grace increases! As weakness comes upon you, his strength comes on even greater--if you believe it.
