

Teachers

by John Follette

Paul's role as a teacher was driven by a profound urge to share the Truth and bring people into a new realm of Spirit with contact with God.

Scripture: Proverbs 9:9, Matthew 28:19, Ephesians 4:11, 2 Timothy 2:2

Topics: "Christian Teaching", "Spiritual Growth"

Description

John Follette emphasizes the profound role of teaching in Paul's ministry, highlighting how Paul's missionary work was driven by his passion as a teacher. Early teachers introduced people to a new realm of Spirit and contact with God, providing knowledge, Truth, and revelation to feed and instruct the Body of believers.

Transcript

The reason why Paul taught as earnestly as he did, was because his great field was that of a teacher. He was a missionary -- that was the external manifestation of the work which he did, but underneath all of that, there was the most profound urge and drive in that man as a teacher; absolutely!

What did those early teachers teach? They introduced the people into a new realm of Spirit with contact with God. The Jews hadn't had that in the old order. Teachers were chosen, illuminated spirits, with personality gifts; illuminated in the field of spiritual reality. Their ministry was to bring from that field the knowledge, the Truth, the revelation; all that would feed this Body; instruct it; give it its place.
