Description

John Gill emphasizes the core message of the Gospel as articulated in 1 John 3:11, which is the commandment to love one another. He highlights that this command was not only a central theme in Christ's ministry but also a fundamental teaching from the beginning of the Gospel. Gill encourages believers to reflect on their conversion and the importance of love in their relationships, as it is a direct reflection of Christ's teachings and commands.

Transcript

Ver. 11. For this is the message,.... Sent from God by Christ, or what he in his ministry declared, and is the commandment which was so frequently urged by him, Joh 13:34;

that ye have heard from the beginning; of the preaching of the Gospel to them, and of their conversion; see 1Jo 2:7;

that we should love one another; to which the command of Christ, the reason with which it is enforced, and the early notice of it, should engage.
