

1 Peter 3:2

by John Gill

John Gill's sermon on 1 Peter 3:2 emphasizes the importance of chaste conduct and reverence in marriage to honor God and strengthen relationships.

Scripture: Proverbs 31:10-31, Ephesians 5:33, Colossians 3:18, Hebrews 13:4, 1 Peter 3:2

Topics: "Marriage", "Respect in Relationships"

Description

John Gill emphasizes the significance of a wife's chaste conduct in marriage, which includes cheerful submission, deep affection, and a commitment to honor the sanctity of the marital relationship. He highlights the importance of showing reverence to husbands and maintaining a respectful demeanor, driven by both love and the fear of God. This behavior not only strengthens the marital bond but also serves as a witness to others of the beauty of a God-centered marriage.

Transcript

Ver. 2. While they behold your chaste conversation,.... Cheerful subjection, strong affection, and inviolable attachment to them, and strict regard to the honour of the marriage state, and to the preserving of the bed undefiled with lusts and adulteries:

coupled with fear; with reverence of their husbands, giving them due honour, and showing all proper respect; or with the fear of God, which being before their eyes, and upon their hearts, engages them to such an agreeable conversation.
