Transcript

I list in the notes several changed attitudes. There's a changed attitude to hell and damnation. I don't trust Finney's theology about many points, but he was a godly man.

And when he talks about repentance, he knows what he's talking about because he's been through it. Changed attitude to hell and damnation. He says the repentant person feels that it would be so right and so reasonable and so just for God to condemn him to eternal death, that so far from finding fault with the sentence of the law that condemns him, he thinks it is a wonder of heaven that God can forgive him.

He is full of adoring wonder that he is not sent to hell.
