Description

K.P. Yohannan emphasizes the profound impact of genuine remorse and tears in the journey of repentance, using Peter's heartfelt weeping as a powerful example of vulnerability before Christ. He contrasts Peter's response to his sin with Judas's despair, highlighting that true sorrow can lead to forgiveness and a fresh start with Jesus. The sermon calls on individuals to recognize their need for Christ's forgiveness and to approach Him with open hearts, rather than hardening themselves in shame. Yohannan reassures that Jesus is always ready to embrace those who seek Him, offering hope and renewal.

Transcript

Back to Peter--little wonder this giant of a man ran, brushing aside any outstretched arms that would stop him, to a place outside where he could openly sob his heart out. Crying can be therapeutic. The genuine tears of a naughty child usually quickly touch the heart of a loving parent.

When we are truly saddened by what we have done to hurt the heart of our Savior, those tears of remorse can lead us to repentance. Being vulnerable through them can help bring us to the place of looking Christ in the eye, knowing He saw and heard everything, and telling Him how sorry we are.

Too bad Judas didn't understand this truth. Scripture reports that he was "seized with remorse" (Matthew 27:3). Unfortunately, instead of going to his heavenly Father, he "went away and hanged himself" (Matthew 27:5).

If you have never asked Jesus to be Lord of your life, He is waiting for you with open arms. He has long awaited the time to forgive you of all that you have ever done and draw you into His embrace.

He sees your heartache. He wants to wipe away your tears and give you a fresh start. Don't harden your heart like Judas and walk away.

Simply believe that Jesus is the Son of God, who never sinned, who died for the consequence of your sins and rose to bring you life eternal. Ask Jesus to forgive you of your sins; then commit your life and all that you have into His care and direction.
