Description

K.P. Yohannan emphasizes the necessity of drawing near to the Lord in order to effectively carry out His work, highlighting that true ministry must stem from a deep relationship with God. He reflects on a day of worship and prayer, where the presence of the Lord became profoundly real, reinforcing the importance of knowing God's ways. Yohannan warns against the mistake of attempting to do ministry without this intimate connection, as it ultimately detracts from bringing glory to God. The message calls believers to prioritize their relationship with the Lord above all else.

Transcript

"I have set the LORD always before me . . ." Psalm 16:8a

I spoke this message to our fellowship on July 30, 2002. It was one of those days especially set apart for prayer and waiting upon the Lord. We began with hours of worship and adoration, during which the Lord became very real to us.

What I share here was the result of a growing burden God gave me during that time, calling us to remember once more that we must continually draw near to Him, to hear Him and grow in our love and understanding of Him. To try to do any ministry apart from this is a sad mistake.

Our emphasis--no matter what we do--must always be to know the Lord and His ways. Only then can the work be done in total dependence upon Him. Only then can our work bring Him glory. May the Lord draw you closer to Himself as you read this.
