

Unreached Peoples: The Tribes of Myanmar Burma the Kayah

by Paul Hattaway

The speaker shares his experience visiting the Kayah people in Myanmar Burma, highlighting their culture and way of life.

Scripture: Genesis 24:17, Psalm 149:3, Proverbs 27:17, Ecclesiastes 3:1

Topics: "Missions Work", "Cultural Evangelism"

Description

This sermon reflects on a visit to a family in a village near the capital city, observing their daily activities like fetching water, threshing grain, and preparing a traditional dish. The conversation with the family touches on the changes in rice farming and the cultural significance of a collective dance performed by the youth at the foot of a famous mountain peak.

Transcript

Eastern sky and birds-eye view, seen from famous Swakopee mountain peak. The mountain is a major landmark of Pea Instinct and represents Pea of any class. We visited a family in Edu, a village a few miles from Paan, the capital city of Pea Instinct.

A beautiful Pean girl is carrying water from a well right by the house, while her father and brother are also busy on the threshing floor. Mother is preparing ingredients to cook Talabor, a famous Kian dish for her family. At tea break, well at plain tea or smoking break to be precise, we had a chance to chat with them on general matters of their life.

Nodwima, the damsel of the village and the daughter of the farmer we visited said, today rice farming is not the same as before. We then upped our Kian's treble by watching their dong collective dance performed at the foot of Swakopee mountain by young Kian boys and girls.
