

Falling Away From The Lord Starts With Small Things

by Shane Idleman

This sermon emphasizes the danger of idolatry for believers, highlighting how even small distractions can lead to a drift away from God. It warns about the gradual nature of falling into sin, where seemingly insignificant choices can eventually lead to major consequences, such as moral failures like infidelity. The message underscores the vulnerability of all individuals to making detrimental decisions that can have lasting impacts on their faith and relationship with God.

Scripture: 1 Corinthians 10:14, 1 John 5:21, Galatians 5:19, Proverbs 4:23, James 4:7

Topics: "Idolatry", "Consequences of Distraction"

But if I start focusing on this too much, and I want to focus on this too much, and that's basically what idolatry at its core for a believer is, it's anything that begins to take you away from God. Anything. And it will begin to creep in.

And that's why even little things can become big things. Because if you look back, all these guys, and I read books on a lot of these men that fell, in ministry, I've known people that have fallen. All of us are susceptible of falling.

Absolutely, we're one bad choice away from falling. But if you look back, it doesn't start out huge. Somebody said, you know, I woke up today, and I don't know how I had an affair tonight.

I have, how did that happen?
