

All Worldly Grandeur

by Thomas Brooks

Thomas Brooks emphasizes the fleeting nature of worldly wealth and honors, highlighting their impermanence and the inevitability of death.

Scripture: Psalm 49:16-17, Ecclesiastes 5:15, Matthew 6:19-21, Luke 12:15, 1 Timothy 6:7

Topics: "Eternal Perspective", "The Vanity of Worldly Wealth"

Description

Thomas Brooks emphasizes that worldly riches, honors, and titles are temporary and will not accompany us after death. He illustrates death as a porter who strips individuals of their earthly wealth and glory, reminding us of the futility of placing our hope in material possessions. The sermon calls for a focus on eternal values rather than transient worldly grandeur.

Transcript

Riches and honors and titles, and all worldly grandeur--won't go with us beyond the grave.
Death, as a porter, stands at the gate, and strips men of all their worldly wealth and glory!
