

An Atheist at Home

by Thomas Brooks

This sermon warns against hypocrisy, emphasizing the consequences of living a religious life in public while being an atheist in private.

Scripture: Matthew 23:27

Topics: "Hypocrisy", "Authentic Faith"

Description

Thomas Brooks emphasizes the danger of hypocrisy in the Christian life, warning that those who outwardly display a religious facade to gain respect while living like an atheist in their private lives will ultimately be exposed by God. He stresses that true faith must be consistent both publicly and privately, as God sees all and will reveal the true nature of one's heart. The sermon serves as a call to authenticity in one's relationship with God, urging believers to align their inner lives with their outward expressions of faith.

Transcript

He who puts on a religious demeanor abroad to gain himself a great name among men, and at the same time lives like an atheist at home, shall at the last be unmasked by God, and presented before all the world for a most detestable hypocrite.
