

Cut Off One Head

by Thomas Brooks

---

Sin is a persistent and resilient enemy that requires a deep and ongoing commitment to spiritual growth and obedience.

Scripture: Matthew 5:29-30, Romans 6:12, 2 Corinthians 10:5, Galatians 5:17, Ephesians 6:12, Colossians 3:5, Hebrews 12:1, James 4:7, 1 Peter 5:8, 1 John 1:9

Topics: "The Nature of Sin", "Spiritual Warfare"

Description

Thomas Brooks emphasizes the persistent nature of sin, comparing it to the mythical Hydra that grows multiple heads when one is cut off. He illustrates that simply addressing sin once is insufficient, as it continually resurfaces in various forms. The sermon calls for a deeper, more consistent effort to combat sin in our lives, recognizing its tenacity and the need for ongoing vigilance and spiritual warfare.

Transcript

We may say of sin as some say of cats, that they have many lives. Just so--kill sin once and it will live again, kill it again and it will live again, etc. Sin oftentimes is like that monster Hydra--cut off one head and many will rise up in its place.
