

Fair Professors Who Are Foul Sinners

by Thomas Brooks

Fair professors who are foul sinners are hypocrites who live in sin and are under wrath, heading towards eternal ruin.

Scripture: Matthew 7:21

Topics: "True Faith", "Hypocrisy"

Description

Thomas Brooks warns against the hypocrisy of those who profess faith outwardly while harboring sin in their hearts. He emphasizes that many individuals may speak of God but live in contradiction to their profession, indulging in and defending their sinful behaviors. Such individuals not only shame their faith but also risk eternal ruin as they remain under God's wrath. Brooks calls for self-examination and repentance, urging believers to align their hearts and actions with their professed faith.

Transcript

There are many fair professors who are foul sinners --who have much of God on their lips--when they have nothing but sin and hell in their hearts and lives. These men's lives shame their profession. Such professors . . . live in a course of sin, make a trade of sin, indulge their sins, take up arms in defense of sin, make provision for sin, make a sport of sin, take pleasure in sin, and have set their hearts upon their sin. These are yet in their sins, under wrath, and on the way to eternal ruin!
