

He Loves Those Who Are Most Unlovely

by Thomas Brooks

Christ's love and grace are magnified by the greatness of sinners' sins, and faith in Him is essential for true service.

Scripture: Romans 5:8, Ephesians 2:4

Topics: "Redemption", "Grace"

Description

Thomas Brooks emphasizes that the depth of our sins highlights the boundless grace and love of Christ, who extends His favor even to the most unlovely among us. He illustrates this truth through biblical examples like Paul and Mary Magdalene, who, despite their past transgressions, received profound manifestations of divine love. Brooks asserts that without faith in Christ, even our best efforts are tainted and fall short of true righteousness. The sermon calls believers to recognize the transformative power of Christ's love, regardless of their past. Ultimately, it is a message of hope and redemption for all sinners.

Transcript

Ah! sinners, the greatness of your sins does but set off the freeness and riches of Christ's grace, and the immensity of His love! This makes heaven and earth to ring of his praise, that He loves those who are most unlovely, that he shows most favor to those who have sinned most highly against Him; as might be showed by several instances in Scripture--as Paul, Mary Magdalene, and others. Who sinned more against Christ than these? And who had sweeter and choicer manifestations of divine love and favor than these? Until men have faith in Christ, their best services are but splendid sins!
