Topics: "Eternal Life", "The Importance of Choices"

Description

Thomas Brooks emphasizes the profound question posed by the young man, 'What shall I do to inherit eternal life?' He reflects on the weight of eternity, contrasting eternal happiness with eternal misery, and stresses that our actions in this brief life have eternal consequences. Brooks urges listeners to consider their cares and fears regarding eternity, highlighting the urgency of seeking salvation and understanding the significance of their choices in this life.

Transcript

It was a good question, which the young man proposed,

"What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Luke 10:25. I know

I shall be eternally happy--or eternally miserable; eternally blessed--or eternally cursed; eternally saved--or eternally damned!

"Oh! what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" My cares, my fears, my troubles--are all about eternity! No time can reach eternity, no age can extend to eternity, no tongue can express eternity. Eternity is that one perpetual day which shall never have end; what shall I do, what shall I not do--that I may be happy to all eternity? Eternity depends upon those few hours I am to breathe in this world.
