Description

Thomas Brooks emphasizes that a holy life is the ultimate source of joy and comfort, surpassing any pleasure found in ungodliness. He illustrates that true sweetness and pleasantness come from living a life of sanctity, where communion with God brings unparalleled peace and tranquility. Brooks encourages Christians to recognize the profound joy that accompanies a pure and holy walk with God, which far exceeds any past experiences of wickedness.

Transcript

A holy life affords the greatest ground of rejoicing.

There is no pleasure nor felicity compared to that which flows from the ways of sanctity.

The sweetest roses, the strongest comforts, and the greatest pleasantness--is to be found in the ways of holiness. Oh the joy, the peace, the tranquility, the serenity--which attends the ways of purity! Christians have more comforts, sweetness, and pleasantness, in one hour's communion with God, in one hour's walking with God--than ever they have found in all their former ways of ungodliness and wickedness.
