Description

Watchman Nee emphasizes the interrelationship between fact, faith, and experience in the Christian life. He explains that facts are God's promises and gifts, while faith is the believer's trust in these truths, transforming them into personal experience. Experience, in turn, is the manifestation of Christ's life in believers, reflecting their understanding and application of God's facts. Nee warns that without understanding these connections, believers may face confusion in their faith and teachings. He illustrates these concepts through the doctrine of redemption, highlighting its significance in the believer's life.

Transcript

Fact

Facts are God's promises, His redemption, His works, and His free gifts.

Faith

Faith denotes the way man believes in God, trusts in His work and redemption, and claims His promises. It is a kind of working and attitude through which God's facts are transformed into man's experience.

Experience

Experience is the proper living of the believers, which they secure through believing in God. It is the expression of the life of Christ practiced in the believers' living. Experience is the realization of all Christ's accomplishments and victories. It is the practical application, manifestation, and living out of God's facts. The histories of all the saints recorded in the Bible belong to this category.

Not only those who are teachers but all believers should know the interrelationship of these three: fact, faith, and experience. Otherwise, they will be confused in their living and in their teachings. Furthermore, they will find many contradictions and apparent disagreements in their reading of the Bible.

I am afraid that up to this point I have still not presented the scriptural teachings in a clear way. For this reason, I want to present a few great doctrines in the Bible as proofs.

We Christians have believed in the substitutional death of the Lord Jesus and have experienced the effect of His redemption. Redemption is an experience for the sinners; we Christians have already been redeemed. For us, redemption is a past experience. It seems as if we have no need to speak of it anymore. Yet for the sake of illustrating the relationship between these three things--fact, faith, and experience--and in order to show us their continuity and importance, I will first use as an example an experience that we have already had.
